RUTH'S PLANE MADE PERFECT DROP TO SEA

Flames Broke Out After Tanker Had Craft Almost
Loaded

PARIS, Oct. 14.—(Forced down by fire after battling storm and mechanical trouble, Ruth Elder and her comrade in adventure, George W. Halde, were safe and sound today on the Dutch tanker Barenbrecht, steaming steadily to the Azores. They were due to arrive there some time tomorrow morning. Their monoplane, the American Girl, took fire after their rescue and now lies beneath the waves of the Atlantic.

It has been estimated that Mrs. Elder, with her companion, during the 41 hours, 25 minutes they were in the air, seeing a new world, flying over the ocean, and also the latest flight over the Atlantic.

The "American Girl" according to the company's journal, averaged only a little more than 2,000 miles an hour.

When forced to alight they had covered some 2,000 miles from New York in the longest flight ever made in a monoplane. They fell short of the European continent by several hundred miles and of Paris their goal, by about 1,500.

A little more light was thrown on their flight in a wireless message from Captain Goss, of the Barenbrecht, who had encountered a storm some 200 miles from the Azores.

Fighting the storm right through, the "American Girl" was found to be in a position to land. The plane, however, was damaged and the two pilots were forced to abandon it.

They continued to fly as best they could but were handicapped. For the first time in the flight, they were forced to land on the Barenbrecht.

At the time of the accident, the plane was in the process of being loaded with fuel.
